4. Intellectual Property

All copyrights, trademarks, service marks, design rights, and other intellectual property rights in and to the original Product remain the sole property of the Publisher, except for any original modifications or branding elements added by the Licensee.

This Agreement grants usage rights only and does not constitute a sale, transfer, or assignment of copyright ownership in the original Product.

5. Derivative Works

The Licensee may create derivative works based on the Product for permitted commercial use. However, such derivative works remain subject to the restrictions set forth in this Agreement, including the prohibition against granting PLR, resell, or redistribution rights to third parties unless expressly authorized in writing by the Publisher.

Upon termination, the Licensee must immediately cease all use, sale, distribution, and exploitation of the Product and destroy or delete all copies of the original Product in the Licensee's possession or control, except to the extent retention is required by law.

Termination shall not limit any other rights or remedies available to the Publisher.
